This tutorial will show you the quickest way to create a surreal texture without any special brushes. For this tutorial, you will only need Photoshop. How to Create a Surreal Surface Texture in Photoshop In order to create a surreal surface texture, the first thing you need to do is to create a new layer, and then add a large texture. In the next step, you will use the content-aware fill tool to fill in the areas you don't want to have texture. 1. Create a New Layer Create a new layer and name it 'Surface Texture'. Place the layer between the layer you want to fill and the background layer. 2. Add a Large Texture Drag the 'Sheep' image, located on the pattern palette, to the new layer. Make sure that the layer is set to 'Photoshop Clip.' In this way, the whole image will be used as texture instead of being placed as a mask, which could create distortions. 3. Create a Mask Leave the 'Surface Texture' layer blank. Select 'Fill' from the 'Expression' palette, and select 'Use the Black Color as Mask.' This will create a black mask over the surface. 4. Use the Content-Aware Fill Draw a few lines over the surface with the lasso tool. Hold down the shift key and drag the lasso tool over the areas you do not want to have texture. The lasso tool will turn into a cross-hairs tool. When you release the shift key, you will see that a preview window will show you where the lasso tool will apply the content-aware fill. You can adjust the settings and alter the size of the selected area, until you are satisfied with the results. 5. Change the Layer's Mode Select 'Normal' from the 'Layers' palette and change the 'Opacity' of the 'Surface Texture' layer to 25%. This will create a good effect of a surreal surface on the image. Alternatively, you can reduce the size of the canvas and increase the 'Opacity' of the new layer and the background layer. If you want to make a realistic surface, you can do the same and reduce the size of 388ed7b0c7

Public transportation options are limited in the St. Louis suburb of St. Louis County, Missouri. The county remains in lock down as police search for St. Louis University freshman student Michael Brown, who is wanted for an incident that left the teen's death marked in the hands of the Ferguson Police Department. For now, the problem of transportation is handled by Missouri State Highway Patrol, who are coordinating the movements of over 2,000 officers throughout the area. The Missouri Department of Transportation is providing buses to residents to assist with their movement. For those that live outside of the Ferguson area, the situation is a little different. Police are in the process of evacuating low-risk homes and getting them to the safety of one of several mobile recreation centers, such as the one at 1444 Interstate 470/Interstate 70 in Normandy, Missouri. Those living near the Ferguson-Florissant School District's Monarch School are being asked to take shelter there as well. The school's parent body, the St. Louis County Federation of Teachers, said that the school's students have been moved into the community center and that the neighborhood is being patrolled by police. St. Louis County Police Chief Jon Belmar said that there are "no plans to evacuate" residents near the area that the gunfight occurred, and that some homes are being occupied by police and State Patrol officers. Police are offering their services to residents to be relocated, and to those who are asked to evacuate their homes, they are doing so to a safe distance, he said. Frustrated residents have set up numerous barricades in the area. The Police Departments of Ferguson and Webster Groves have urged residents to remove them, warning that they could get struck by police. Among the barricades, a pile of tires and four police vehicles sit in the middle of the street at the site where several officers shot at Brown. The Associated Press reported that as the search for Brown continues, officers were shutting down all access roads to the suburbs. Many are waiting for Missouri Governor Jay Nixon to make a statement, and it was unclear how the governor's office was responding. Police are looking for Brown, a black male who police say fired on officers. Brown is now the focus of a manhunt and investigators are looking for two other males who they think might have been involved in the shooting. The Associated Press says that police have yet to confirm a third person's involvement. Footage
