and the platelet count before and after operation. The platelet count was high in all advanced cases, and increased again in the cases which recurred. The relationship between the platelet count and the prognosis was investigated. The prognosis was good and the platelet count increased in the patients who underwent operation within 3 months after admission. The mean platelet count significantly increased after operation. One of the cases who was in the stage I and did not undergo operation is still alive with low relapse and low grade.GRAND RAPIDS, MI -- Grand Rapids police are investigating a stabbing that happened Sunday night at a home near 16th Street and Monroe Avenue NW. I'm trying to get a simple way to just use sideband demodulation (basically demodulate a sinusoid with a carrier) and only get one of the two sidebands. I have been researching a lot to try and figure this out, but can't seem to find any examples that specifically help. A: First figure out the fundamental, half, and zero frequency points of your carrier. The easiest way to do this is to calculate your baseband sine wave in MATLAB and apply it to a step pulse (one of the simplest ways to find the baseband wave is to use the fourier transform). Given that you know the fundamental and zero frequencies, you can then calculate your half frequency. However, while this will give you the right half of the spectrum, it will include the leading edge (which you are already looking for) and trailing edge (which you really only want). I previously used MATLAB to find the fundamental and zero frequencies. I'll repost the resulting MATLAB script here: t = 0:1/10000:3; f = zeros(length(t),1); f(1) = 0.5; f(end) = 0.5; se = sin(2*pi*f*t); u = fft(se); power_u = sum(u); f1 = freqz(u,1); fs = f1(1):f1(end-1)+0.5; f0 = f1(1):f1(end-1); f0(1) = f0(end) = 0.5; I will now show you how you can modify the code to get just
